The clarion call at the heart of the revolution we call Christianity is not complicated: "_____, _____ and be _____." It would start in Jerusalem and spread to the entire world.

Discussion 1. "Repent, believe and be forgiven." Some parts of this message are more difficult than others. Which part(s) do you think we tend to shy away from today? Why? What is the danger of not including the entire message?

Jesus did not recruit disciples merely to be followers. He recruited them to be shaped and grown into the people who would launch the age of the church. They had no idea the _____ and _____ of their calling.

Discussion 2. Why would Jesus not have given the disciples a more detailed view of their calling when He first called them? Do you think that is true for us Christ followers today as well? Why or why not?

Jesus being fully God and fully man makes Him difficult to grasp and even more difficult to describe. To be clear, the Jesus of the Bible begins in _____, spends a little while among us here on Earth, and then returns to His original glory, where He exists today.

Discussion 3. Why is it important to recognize Jesus as both fully God and fully man? What kinds of questions does this leave you wondering?

No matter where we look in God's eternal story, there is only one appropriate response to experiencing the glory of God: _____. As Christ followers, worship will always be a key piece of our fellowship.

Discussion 4. Can you recall a time or circumstance in your life when you felt you absolutely, positively HAD to worship God in response? What was it about those circumstances that drove you to worship?
